Seeing your kid: 1.1 million dads and 120,000 moms of minor children are incarcerated in the U.S. For most of those parents, their in-person visits with their kids, already severely limited, have been suspended during the pandemic. More than

1.7 million American kids have a parent who is imprisoned now, and about 10 million kids have had a parent incarcerated at one point, the Casey Foundation reports. (Above, Carlos holds his son, Damian, during a parent-child bonding visit at the Everglades Re-entry Center in Miami, where Carlos is incarcerated.) Research shows children who have consistent contact with an incarcerated parent have better mental health and are more socially engaged.
